THE POET PERCIVAL.

[From the New York Daily Times.] We observe that the library of the late Dr. Percival has been offered by his executor and residuary legatee to the city of Chicago, in a little of what books such an institution were respectfully solicited. composed; but it is somewhat amusing to ort 29 think of Percival's unique collection of books as a City Library for our fast brethren of mined to change my business, I will, on the great City of the Lakes. Chicago is an and after this date, offer my entire Stock of extraordinary place. In twenty years it Fancy Goods, Hosiery, &c., at greatly reduced reached a population which it took London prices. All persons wanting goods in my line, or Ameterdam twenty centuries to achieve .- | will do well to call and examine my stock be-It is now the greatest primary grain market in the world, though twenty years ago it did oct 19 Fancy and Variety Store. not ship a bushel of wheat. But unless it has raised scholars as numerously as grain merchants, we apprehend that it would find Percival's library of very little available value. There are hardly a dozen men in the ply received at H. B. WHITTINGTON'S, Union to whom it would be a serviceable collection. It was full of books in all the languages which nobody reads, except some such rare enthusiast of learning as Percival himself. Probably there was no other man in the United States who could read all of

Percival was one of the most remarkable men of his time. As a linguist and as a man of science he was more eminent than as a poet, and yet his poetical faculty was murvellously brilliant and prolific. He was a geologist and a geographer; he understood the structure and a geographer; he understood the structure of the earth we live on, and knew all the bighways and byways of its surface-roads, rivers and capals -as familiarly as most men know their own domicile or the way to market. His babits of study were peculiar. He would take up a volume at a bock-eller's counter, and stand till he had read it through. He never out the leaves of his books. For many years be occupied rooms at the Hospital, at New Haven, and during the whole period those rooms were entered only once by a visitor. He had no food cooked during that time, but lived frugally on dried beef, berring, bread, with apples and other fruit when they were abundant in the market .-He read all day and all night-throwing himself on his bed in his clothes, when nature insisted on repose. When his bed room was opened, after his death, it was covered more than an inch thick with dust, except a path that had been kept free from the door to the bed. It was but seldom that Percival took a lively interest in what was going on in the world, but when aroused by any event, he became enthusiastic in relation toit. The great struggle of Greece for independence appealed most strongly to him, and his poetry at the time was devoted entirely to topics derived from this source. In the famous political campaign preceding President Harrison's election, he was drawn out by his friend Dr. Bacon, and entered into it with a zeal truly poetic. It is not generally known that a very large number of the songs of these days, that rang through the log cabins from Maine to Louisians, were from the pen of Dr. Percival. He would attend the political gatherings at New Haven, where they were sung; and enjoy them with as much gusto as the most devoted politician of the canvass. When engaged on the Geological Survey of Connecticut, be was necessarily brought more in contact with men, and the influence of this association was to some extent visible in modifying his morbid temper and habits. An anedote is told of him in this connection that serves to illustrate his character .-The law contemplating the survey, provided that the geologist should receive his remuneration after he had made his report and it had been approved by the Governor. Percival waited upon Governor Ellsworth with the report, and was very courteously receiv- many conveniences which our manufactory is cd. The Governor took the report, and promwhen he had examined it as the law required, would make the necessary requisition if it were satisfactory. Percival rolled up his report, and withdrew. He insisted that peither the Governor nor any one else was competent to pass upon the merits of his report, and he would not submit to the indignity. He was desperately in want of the money that the report would bring him, but he would not take it on such conditions. Some of his friends finally procured the report from him by an innocent stratagem, and it received, of course, the formal approbation of the Governor, who admitted his incompetence to revise a geological work of Dr. Percival, but was too good an officer not to yield due obedience to the law.

We all remember the story told of the pair of new shoes left at Dr. Johnson's door when he was a young man, and had not a decent pair to his feet. A similar anecdote is related of Dr. Percival. A friend noticed that the cap, which had so long peered above the cloak in which the Doctor enveloped bimself, was becoming altogether too shabby, and left word with a batter on the main street to present him with a more appropriate, though less poetical covering. In the most delicate way possible, the shopman intimat ed to the poet that any hat on the counter was at his service-but the poet turned on his beels with contempt. He would never accept a pecuniary favor of any description .-Being at one time somewhat embarrassed by his expenditures on his books, some of his friends made up a purse of $1400, which they tendered him to relieve his difficulties. He would only accept it as a lean, and not only insisted upon giving security but actually gave it in a mortgage on his library from which his friends were ultimately reimbur sed, principal and interest. Of his poetical reputation Dr. Percival took no care. If he had managed his productions with a tithe of the art possessed by some of his Parnassian brethren, he might have acquired money as well as fame from his writings. Had he studied the secre's of hot-press | terms, enquire of | GREEN & BROTHER. and embellishment, of cream-colored paper laid between drab covers, or been familiar with the effects of blue and gold in giving popularity to inspiration, Percival would have become a favorite, and the lavor of the people, would have reacted on his selection of topics and familiarized his style. Those few poems of his in which he treated common and domestic subjects, find a universal acceptance with the lovers of poetry, and all of themdeserve a far larger popularity than they enjoy. As to his library, we apprehend it will be ascertained not to suit as a city library for Chicago, and that it will be more usefully dispersed among the various institutions of the land, according to their several requirements.
